Aloha is a Hawaiian word that means hello or goodbye. It's about kindness, compassion, a welcoming spirit.

RB Kelly
Body Language Boss

Rejection, awkwardness, embarrassment, frustration - these are emotions we face every day, but it doesn't have to be that way. Communication in the workplace is essential to performing tasks and working as a team. An awareness of your body language helps you assess the message you are sending your colleagues. There are revolutionary secrets out there.

RB Kelly, Hawaii's only certified body language trainer, received her certification in nonverbal communication from the Science of People, a human behavior research lab with over 2,500 studies, where she learned "people secrets" previously reserved for researchers and scientists, interrogators, bigwig politicians, and federal agents. For decades, the highest quality training and information for communication skills has been kept secret for only the most 'important' users, skills she now shares with her clients enabling them to make twice the sales in half the time, become leading performers in their fields, and earn the respect and admiration they rightfully deserve. Hawaii's only certified body language trainer is bringing these super-secret people skills to YOU!

William Meheula, Attorney
Sullivan Meheula Lee

William Meheula has over thirty-five years of experience litigating cases in Hawaii's state and federal courts as well as before administrative agencies and other adjudicatory bodies. Mr. Meheula's primary practice areas include complex commercial litigation, real estate litigation, legal malpractice, administrative law and Native Hawaiian rights.

Mr. Meheula's legal malpractice and ethics practice involves defending and prosecuting claims by and against lawyers. In addition to his litigation experience in this practice area, Mr. Meheula served as the chairman of a federal and state bar committee that resulted in promulgation of the Hawaii Rules of Professional Conduct in 1994. Between 2003 and 2011, Mr. Meheula served on the Committee to Revise the Hawaii Rules of Professional Conduct.

Helen Cho
Aloha Green Apothecary

Helen L. Cho is a strategy and culture consultant. She currently focuses on three industries: renewable energy, medical marijuana, and tech startups. Born and raised in NYC, she helped build the startup ecosystem in New York as VP of Strategic Partnerships at Cuurio and executive team member of StrategyHack. Before moving back to the East Coast, she was writing for the Economist in Beijing during the 2008 Olympics. Aloha Green is a licensed medical cannabis dispensary in Honolulu, Hawaii. We provide patients on Oahu with products made from cannabis that is grown and cultivated using sustainable, natural methods. We strive to create wholesome medicine that restores our bodies and souls, supports our economy, and protects the ecosystem.

Clare Hanusz, Attorney

While a first-year student, Clare was awarded a fellowship from the National Lawyers Guild for a summer internship with the Florence Immigrant and Refugee Rights Project in Florence, Arizona. It was there, in the summer of 1998, that she litigated her first deportation case for a Spanish-speaking detainee. Upon returning to Hawaii she continued her work with immigrants, serving on the Board of Directors with Na Loio (now the Hawaii Immigrant Justice Center at Legal Aid) where she also spent a summer as a legal intern.

After graduating from law school in 1999, Clare worked at Na Loio heading up a Neighbor Island immigration project to bring legal services to immigrants in rural and isolated communities. She also worked for two Honolulu law firms and had a solo practice under the Law Office of Clare Hanusz.

Clare has represented hundreds of individuals before the immigration court, the Board of Immigration Appeals, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. She has assisted clients with naturalization, adjustment of status (“Green Cards”), U visas (for immigrant victims of certain serious crimes) and T visas for victims of human trafficking, as well as consular processing, waivers of inadmissibility, asylum, special immigrant juvenile status, employment based and religious worker visas and options for immigrant survivors of domestic violence.

Clare is the recent past Chair of the Hawaii Chapter of the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA), and has served as local AILA liaison to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and as co-chair for the Advocacy Committee. She is also a member of the National Lawyers Guild's National Immigration Project and a founding member of the Hawaii Coalition for Immigration Rights and the Hawaii Coalition for Civil Rights. She has partnered with the American Civil Liberties Union to litigate cutting-edge motions to suppress in immigration court and serves on the ACLU of Hawaii Litigation Committee. She has written on immigration issues for the Hawaii State Bar Association, AILA, and local publications, and has spoken locally and a nationwide. She has been featured in local, national and international news.

Marc Greenberg (Director/Producer/Editor) - Although Marc has spent the last 20 years working within the court reporting industry, there was a time before that - long before - when he worked in "Hollywood" and dabbled in screenwriting and directing. For the Record proved to be the perfect marriage between Marc's two passions - court reporting and filmmaking.

For the Record - The Story

The idea for For the Record was born in 2009 after I had a brief conversation with Mark Kislingbury, the fastest court reporter in the world (certified by Guinness). He mentioned to me that he wanted to break his own record and write 370 to 400 words per minute. Would I be interested in promoting his record attempt? I had been working in the court reporting industry for almost 15 years at the time, teaching and promoting my own "stuff." The quick answer - no - just too much on my plate.

A year passed.

I was having a conversation with my father about the court reporting industry. He asked the same questions I'd heard a thousand times before - "Court reporters are still around? Can't a machine do that now?" My own father! And it wasn't just me facing those questions. Reporters everywhere answer those types of question all the time. So I felt it was time to answer those questions on a larger scale.

I knew it wouldn't be enough just to capture the Guinness record attempt. I wanted to capture the steno culture - share its history - its future. There's an irony in the court reporting industry: If a court reporter is doing their job well, they go virtually unnoticed. The goal is to capture the record without becoming a part of it. The irony - that very ability means that court reporting flies under the radar. It's not an industry that naturally self promotes. You can see a teacher teaching - a trash collector collecting - you can easily define what they do. That's not the case with court reporters. For the Record aims to define what they do and introduce the general population to this still-thriving occupation.

William Meheula, Esq.

Despite hundreds of pages of policies, codes of ethics, codes of conduct, organizational values, and carefully defined work environments, company cultures, lapses in workplace ethics occur every day. Some decisions require that you prioritize and choose between competing ethical values and principles. Ethical decision-making is based on core character values like trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring, and good citizenship. Ethical awareness is the key to a healthy work environment.

3:30 p.m. - 5:00 p.m.: "For the Record," a court reporting documentary (.15 CEUs)

Marc Greenberg (Director/Producer/Editor)

As court reporters, we possess an essential set of unique skills. Reporters, like Mark Kislingbury, take these skills to new heights and have had phenomenal success in court reporting contests. For the Record tracks several stenographers as they strive to break the Guinness record and seize the title of World's Fastest Court Reporter. It also explores the steno culture, the connections people make as 'interpreters' of the hard of hearing, and ins and outs of court reporting and captioning.
